Art Unit: 3724

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1,3-7,9,11-14,16,18 and 19 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a).

McCay et al.'575 shows a core slabber with most of the recited limitation including a cutter (30) mounted on an axial traversing element (23,31), which in turn is mounted on a radial traversing element (11). The feeler 80 constitutes a controller that determines a maximum depth of cut (paragraph spanning columns 3 and 4).

McCay lacks an integral transport element with two engaging portions, but it is well known in the art to employ an integral transport element, as taught by Esping et al.'098, who shows in figure 2 a pair of engagement pins (18) for transporting the roll upward to the slabbing position (lines 28-30, column 2). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to have modified McCay by adding an integral transport element, as taught by Esping, in order to facilitate lifting the heavy roll into the slabbing position.

The "feed section" is below the roll in McCay's figure 2. The pins 18 lift the roll from the "feed section" up to the slabbing position.

The "discharge section" can be any spot nearby McCay's machine. The roll "may be conveyed" to the discharge section. Note that Applicant has claimed no structure for performing this task. It could be rolled there manually.

The "material removal section" is wherever the conveyor takes the material (lines 33,34, column 2).

3. Applicant's arguments with respect to the claims have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

4. Any inquiry concerning this communication or earlier communications from the examiner should be directed to Kenneth E. Peterson whose telephone number is 571-272-4512. The examiner can normally be reached on Mon-Thur, 7:30-4:30.
